THEMES:

There are several themes in 'Because I could not stop for Death.'

- ◆ The song "Because I could not stop for death" explores both the certainty of death and the unforeseen things that occur after someone dies. Themes in this poem include afterlife, vagueness, and a slight air of mystery.

STANZA - 1 -

Because I could not stop for Death—
He kindly stopped for me—
The Carriage held but just Ourselves—
And Immortality.

A chariot ride occurred because it is the woman's time to pass away, not because she wants it to happen, as the first stanza quite interestingly indicates. Death has a duty to stop for her because she "could not stop for Death" and very few individuals would choose to do so. As she boards Death's chariot, the woman makes a more puzzling discovery. She describes those in the vehicle, saying that in addition to herself and Death, "Immortality" is present as well.

STANZA -2

We slowly drove—He knew no haste
And I had put away
My labor and my leisure too,
For His Civility—

Death wasn't in a hurry as they travelled at a comfortable pace. To honour his courteous attitude and his invitation to escort her, the lady had left all of her duties and pleasures behind

KABULIWALA

- Rabindranath Tagore

Kabuliwala Characters

- i. The Narrator
- ii. Rahamat / The “Kabuliwala”
- iii. Mini
- iv. The Narrator’s Wife / Mini’s Mother
- v. Parvati

A few days later, the narrator finds Mini sitting next to Rahamat and talking to him with a pile of raisins and nuts in her lap. The narrator tells Rahamat not to give her any more treats and gives him a half-rupee, which Rahamat takes. Later, Mini's mother scolds Mini for having a half-rupee, which Mini says Rahamat gave her. The narrator saves Mini "from her mother's wrath" and brings her outside where she tells him that Rahamat has come by almost every day to listen to her talk. Among the numerous jokes they have together, one starts with Rahamat telling Mini, "don't ever go off to your śvaśur-bāri." Mini doesn't understand what this means because the narrator and his wife are "progressive people" who "don't keep talking to [their] young daughter about her future marriage," and so she innocently asks him if he is going to his. Rahamat jokingly shakes a fist and says he'll "settle him," making Mini laugh.

It is autumn, which the narrator associates with kings setting out "on their world-conquests," which further reminds him that he has never left Calcutta even though he longs to explore the world. He has an active imagination and frequently imagines distant lands, but he is "a rooted sort of individual" and whenever he does leave his "familiar spot" he will "practically collapse." Because of this, the narrator is happy to spend a morning just listening to Rahamat's stories of Afghanistan and traveling. Mini's mother is very different: she is scared of the outside world and imagines it is full of extreme dangers. Unhappy with Rahamat, a complete stranger, spending so much time with Mini, she warns the narrator to keep an eye on him. When the narrator tells her there is nothing to worry about, she talks about the possibility of Mini being kidnapped and sold into slavery. Rahamat, however, continues to come and the narrator continues to enjoy seeing him with Mini.

When Mini leaves, Rahamat suddenly realizes that his daughter, like Mini, will have grown up and be different from the little girl he once knew. As Rahamat thinks about Afghanistan and his daughter, the narrator pulls out some money and asks Rahamat to use it to get home. He tells Rahamat that, "by your blessed reunion, Mini will be blessed." Giving Rahamat the money means that Mini's wedding party is not as grand as it might have been, but the narrator is happy with it, believing that "the ceremony was lit by a kinder, more gracious light."

Thank you
