ROLE OF HYPOTHESIS IN SOCIAL RESEARCH

Meaning & Definition

- In general, Hypothesis is an assumption about a population.
- But to researcher, hypothesis means, a formal question that he intends to resolve.
- "A hypothesis is a tentative generalization, the validity which remains to be tested"-George A. Lund burg
- "A proposition which can be put in to test to determine validity"- Goode and Hatt

Characteristics of useful hypothesis:

The entire hypotheses which are developed by the researcher can not be used.

- Conceptual clearance
- Specific
- It should be related to available techniques
- Related to body of theory
- Simple and brief

Importance of Hypothesis

- It provide directions to the researcher
- It is a guide to, the thinking process and the process of research
- It focuses research
- It prevents blind research
- It places clean and specific goals
- It is used to understand the problem clearly and formulate the procedures and methods to solve the problem.
- It serves as a frame work for drawing conclusion

Formulation of Hypothesis:

- Experience survey
- Pilot study
- Exploratory personal investigation
- Review of literature
- Review of similar study

Problems in formulating Hypothesis:

- ✓ Lake of theoretical knowledge.
- ✓ Lake of logical background
- ✓ Lake of knowledge of scientific methods

How to overcome the above problems?

- Complete and perfect knowledge about research area
- Hypothesis should be brief and timely
- It must help further research in the field.

Procedure for testing Hypothesis:

- ❖ Making a formal statement
- ❖ Selecting a significance level
- ❖ Deciding the distribution to use
- ❖ Selecting a random sample computing an appropriate value
- ❖ Calculation of probability
- ❖ Comparing the probability

Formulating a Research Problem

"Well begun is half done"
-Aristotle.

L. JAMES
Assistant Professor & Head
Dept. of Commerce
Don Bosco College
Dharmapuri.

Research

Research is an organized, systematic, data-based, critical, objective, scientific inquiry or investigation into a specific problem or issue with the purpose of finding solutions to it or clarifying it.

Research – Definition

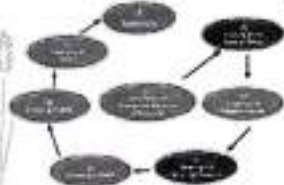

"Research comprises defining and redefining problems, formulating hypothesis or suggested solutions; collecting, organizing and evaluating data; making deductions and reaching conclusions; and at last carefully testing the conclusions to determine whether they fit the formulating hypothesis".

- Clifford Woody

Research Process

- 1. Formulating the research problem
- 2. Literature survey
- 3. Identifying the research hypothesis
- 4. Choosing the research design
 - > To know a phenomenon more in details or idea & insight
 - > When given describing the characteristics of a particular individual & group
 - > To test hypothesis, experimental course, for the hypothesis of causal relationship between variables
 - > When looking to study design (Probability & non-probability sampling)
- 5. Collection of the data (Primary & Secondary data)
- 6. Analysis of data (Editing, coding, summarizing, analyzing & tabulating)
- 7. Interpretation (Testing Null hypothesis only & alternative hypothesis - if)
- 8. Generalizations and implications
- 9. Presentation and presentation of report

The Research Process - steps

Problem definition – Why is it important?

- Defining the problem is considered as the 50% of solving the problem
- The major work in the research problem is properly defining the problem – it gives the way to achieve.
- It is considered as the application of an discipline or inter-disciplinary.
- Problem definition provides better measurement methodology
- It provides better method of hypothesis formulation
- In this stage strong personal vision is required

Smith's 11 Point List to Develop a Research Topic

- Can it be effectively pursued?
- Can interest be sustained by it?
- Is the problem solvable?
- Will it lead to other research problems?
- Is it manageable in size?
- What is the potential for making original contribution to the theory?
- What is the social outcome of the research?
- Are you competent in solving the problem?
- Will you have independent skill in that discipline?
- Will the necessary research apparatus exist in an area of demand or promise for future?

goff

Formulating the Research Problem

- The first and the most important step
- It identifies your destination
- It tells what you intend to research
- The more specific and the clearer the problem, the better you are
- It is the seed of everything that follows

Define what you want to find out about

Factors: Interest, time, resources and knowledge

Now you want to formulate a research problem (define areas, topics, problems/issues)

How to start?????

Before formulating problems

How much do you know about the area/topics?

Not much — Review literature to learn more

Good — Can you describe the issues/problems discussed to date

Consideration in selecting a research problem

- Interest (One should select a topic of great interest to sustain the required motivation)
- Magnitude (time & resource)
- Level of expertise (Make sure that you have an adequate level of expertise)
- Relevance (Doesn't your study add to the existing body of knowledge)
- Availability of data (Before finalizing the topic, make sure that data are available)
- Ethical issues (How ethical issues can affect the study and how ethical problems can be overcome)

Characteristics of a good problem

- + Can be defined
- + Can be solved
- + Can be particularized
- + Can be generalized
- Can be validated

There are three easy steps for choosing topic

1. Review
2. Choose
3. Formulate

Sample Problem Statements

1. The problem was to investigate the effects of exercise on blood lipids among college-age females.
2. The study was designed to determine the relationship between stability performance and physical growth characteristics of preschool children.
3. The present study was designed to identify those characteristics which differentiate between students who binge drink and those that do not.
4. The problem of the study was to determine if there is a relationship between self-efficacy and self-reported alcohol usage among middle-aged adult females.

How does one select a research problem?

- 1) Avoid a subject that has been overdone for it will be difficult to throw any new light in such a case.
- 2) Controversial subjects should be avoided by an average researcher.
- 3) Subjects whose scope is too narrow or vague should be avoided.
- 4) The subject should be familiar and feasible so that the related research material or sources of research are within one's reach.
- 5) Know yourself and the limitations of your experience, your ability and capacity.

Ask Yourself

Am I equipped in terms of experience and knowledge to carry out the research?
Does the study fall within the constraints of budget?
Will I get the necessary cooperation from those who must participate in the research as subjects?
Have I conducted a preliminary study, an exploration of the issue, the problem at hand?

Research can be donkey work or love's labour depending on the choice of the Research Problem.

The technique of defining a research problem

State the problem

- Read up, talk to various people concerned, talk to experts, do field observation in the same area, seek out a guide who can help you grasp the scope and the scale of the subject at hand, immerse yourself into the subject.
- The problem stated in a general way may contain ambiguities that need to be resolved with cool and rational thinking.

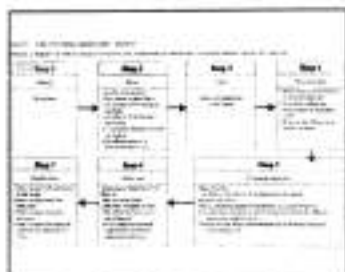

State the problem

- The feasibility of a particular solution should be considered and kept in mind while stating the problem.
- Actions, perhaps even a preliminary survey, find people who may already be doing

State the problem

- The feasibility of a particular solution should be considered and kept in mind while stating the problem.
- Actions, perhaps even a preliminary survey, find people who may already be doing

Steps in research problem formulation

Keep working on defining the research problem till you are clear in your mind what is the nature of the problem, the question that you are addressing.

Unless this is clear your research gets nowhere.

Report

The workshop was conducted for final year students for UG (B.Sc., CS) on 27.06.2018 and on 28.06.2018 (B.C.A & M.Sc CS) at UG Computer lab. The resource person are Prof.A.Muruganandam and Prof.S.Rajesh Singh, Department of Computer Science.

The student are shared a software by a portable document file and resources URL link to install and execute the python programs in both Command Line and IDLE environment. the attendance and images are also enclosed along with this report.

Objective:

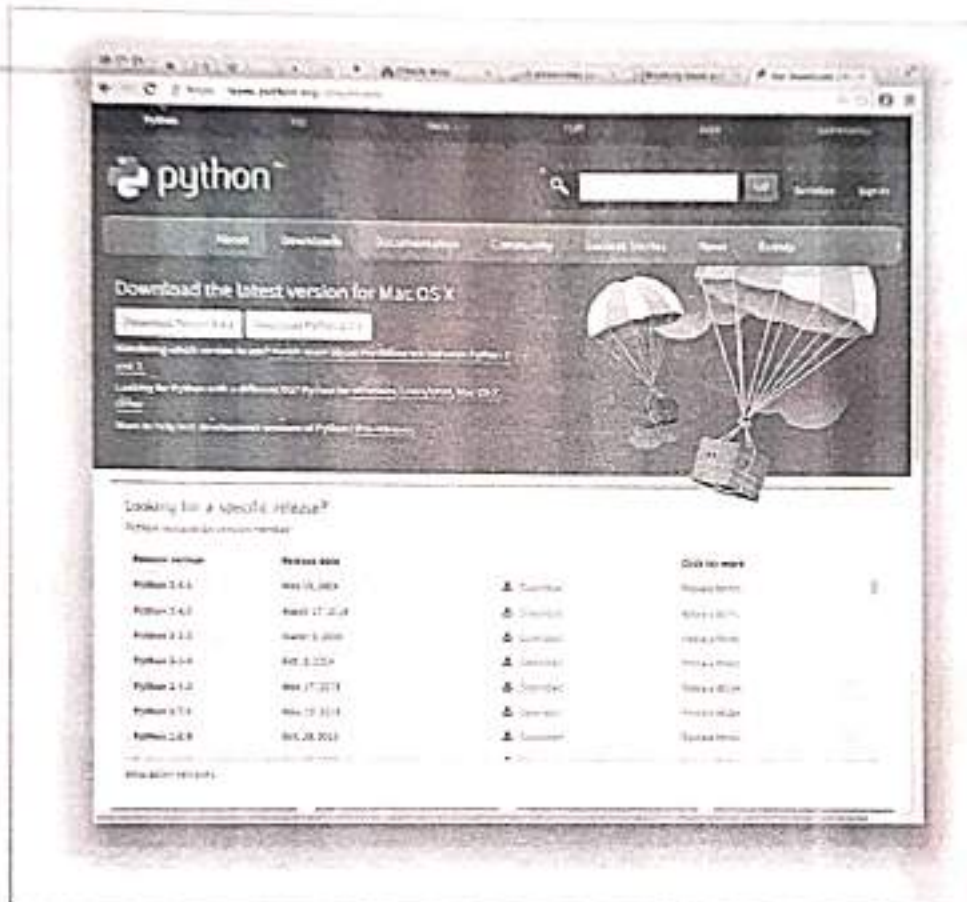

- To get knowledge regarding new upcoming languages.
- To utilize the open source methodologies for programming.
- To develop the project ideas on new era.

Install Standard Python

Go to the Python download page with your web browser. It tries to guess your operating system and present the appropriate choices, but if it guesses wrong, you can use these:

- Python Releases for Windows
- Python Releases for Mac OS X
- Python Source Releases (Linux and Unix)

Sample download page

Click the Download link for the most recent version. In our case, that's 3.4.1. This takes you to an information page like the one shown in Figure D-2.

Interactive Interpreter

The interactive interpreter works almost exactly the same as Python works on files, with one exception: when you type something that has a value, the interactive interpreter prints its value for you automatically.

For example, if you start Python and type the number 61 in the interpreter, it will be echoed to your terminal.

print() also works within the interpreter whenever you want to print something:

>>> print(61)
61
>>>
```

Let's make a Python program file and run it:

1. Open your text editor.
2. Type the line `print(61)`, as it appears above.
3. Save this to a file called `61.py`. Make sure you save it as plain text, rather than a "rich" format such as RTF or Word. You don't need to use the `.py` suffix for your Python program files, but it does help you remember what they are.
4. If you're using a graphical user interface—that's almost everyone—open a terminal window.
5. Run your program by typing the following:

$ python 61.py
```

You should see a single line of output:

61
```

Numbers

Python has built-in support for integers (whole numbers such as 5 and 1,000,000,000) and floating point numbers (such as 3.1416, 14.99, and 1.87e4). You can calculate combinations of numbers with the simple math operators in this table:

Operator	Description	Example	Result
+	addition	5 + 8	13
-	subtraction	90 - 10	80
*	multiplication	4 * 7	28
/	floating point division	7 / 2	3.5
//	integer (truncating) division	7 // 2	3
%	modulus (remainder)	7 % 3	1
	exponentiation	3  4	81

Integers

Any sequence of digits in Python is assumed to be a literal integer:

>>> 5
5
```

You can use a plain zero (0):

>>> 0
0
```

But don't put it in front of other digits:

```
>>> 05
File "<stdin>". line 1
  05
  ^
SyntaxError: invalid token
```

SyntaxError: invalid token

Division is a little more interesting, because it comes in two flavors:

- / carries out floating-point (decimal) division
- // performs integer (truncating) division

Even if you're dividing an integer by an integer, using a / will give you a floating-point result:

>>> 9 / 5
1.8
```

Truncating integer division gives you an integer answer, throwing away any remainder: *

>>> 9 // 5
1

Dividing by zero with either kind of division causes a Python exception:

>>> 5 / 0
Traceback (most recent call last): File "<stdin>". line
  1, in <module>
ZeroDivisionError: division by zero
>>> 7 // 0
Traceback (most recent call last): File "<stdin>". line
  1, in <module>
```

```
'Snip'
>>> 'Crackle'
'Crackle'

The interactive interpreter echoes strings with a single quote, but all are treated exactly the same by Python.

You can also use three single quotes ('''') or three double quotes ("""):

>>> '''Bum!'''
'Bum'
>>> """Nice!"""
'Nice!'
```

Triple quotes aren't very useful for short strings like these. Their most common use is to create multiline strings, like this classic poem from Edward Lear:

```
>>> poem = '''There was a Young Lady of Norway,
... Who casually sat in a doorway;

... When the door squeezed her flat,
... She exclaimed, "What of that?"
... This courageous Young Lady of Norway.'''
>>>

(This was entered in the interactive interpreter, which prompted us with >>> for the first line and ... until we entered the final triple quotes and went to the next line.)

If you tried to create that poem with single quotes, Python would make a fuss when you went to the second line:

>>> poem = 'There was a young lady of Norway. File "<stdin>".
line 1
poem = 'There was a young lady of Norway.

SyntaxError: EOL while scanning string literal
```

If you have multiple lines within triple quotes, the line ending characters will be preserved in the string. If you have leading or trailing spaces, they'll also be kept:

```
>>> poem2 = '''I do not like thee, Doctor Fell,
... The reason why, I cannot tell.
... But this I know, and know full well:
... I do not like thee, Doctor Fell.
... '''
>>> print(poem2)
I do not like thee, Doctor Fell.
The reason why, I cannot tell.
But this I know, and know full well: I do not like thee, Doctor Fell.

>>>

Escape with \

Python lets you escape the meaning of some characters within strings to achieve effects that would otherwise be hard to express. By preceding a character with a backslash (\), you give it a special meaning. The most common escape sequence is \n, which means to begin a new line. With this you can create multiline strings from a one-line string.

define a tuple—but using parentheses doesn't hurt. You can use them to enclose the values, which helps to make the tuple more visible:

>>> marx_tuple = ('Groucho', 'Chico', 'Harpo')
>>> marx_tuple
('Groucho', 'Chico', 'Harpo')
```

Tuples let you assign multiple variables at once:

```
>>> marx_tuple = ('Groucho', 'Chico', 'Harpo')
>>> a, b, c = marx_tuple
>>> a
'Groucho'
>>> b
'Chico'
>>> c
'Harpo'

This is sometimes called tuple unpacking.

You can use tuples to exchange values in one statement without using a temporary variable:

```
>>> password = 'swordfish'
>>> icecream = 'tutti-frutti'
>>> password, icecream = icecream, password
>>> password
'tutti-frutti'
>>> icecream
'swordfish'
>>>
```

The `tuple()` conversion function makes tuples from other things:

```
>>> marx_list = ['Groucho', 'Chico', 'Harpo']
>>> tuple(marx_list)
('Groucho', 'Chico', 'Harpo')
```

Tuples versus Lists

You can often use tuples in place of lists, but they have many fewer functions—there is no `append()`, `insert()`, and so on—because they can't be modified after creation.

Comment with

A comment is a piece of text in your program that is ignored by the Python interpreter. You might use comments to clarify nearby Python code, make notes to yourself to fix something someday, or for whatever purpose you like. You mark a comment by using the `#` character; everything from that point on to the end of the current line is part of the comment. You'll usually see a comment on a line by itself, as shown here:

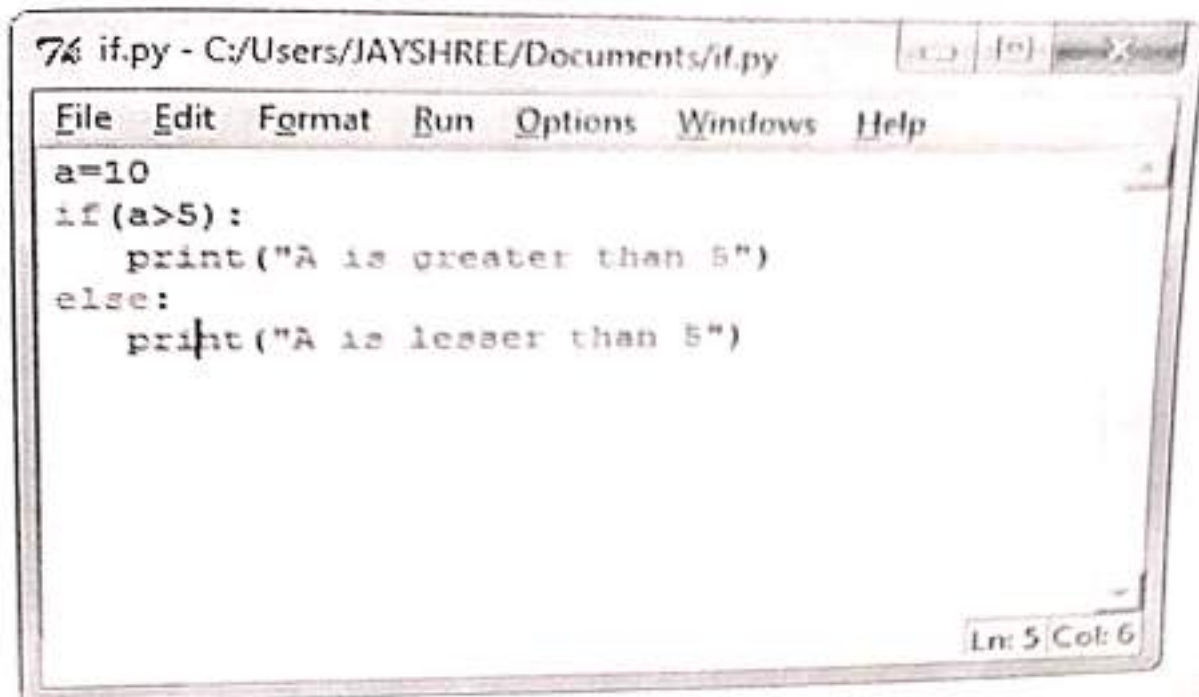

```
>>> # 60 sec/min * 60 min/hr * 24 hr/day
>>> seconds_per_day = 86400
```

Or, on the same line as the code it's commenting:

>>> seconds_per_day = 86400 # 60 sec/min * 60 min/hr * 24 hr/day
```

Python does not have a multiline comment. You need to explicitly begin each comment line or section with a `#`.

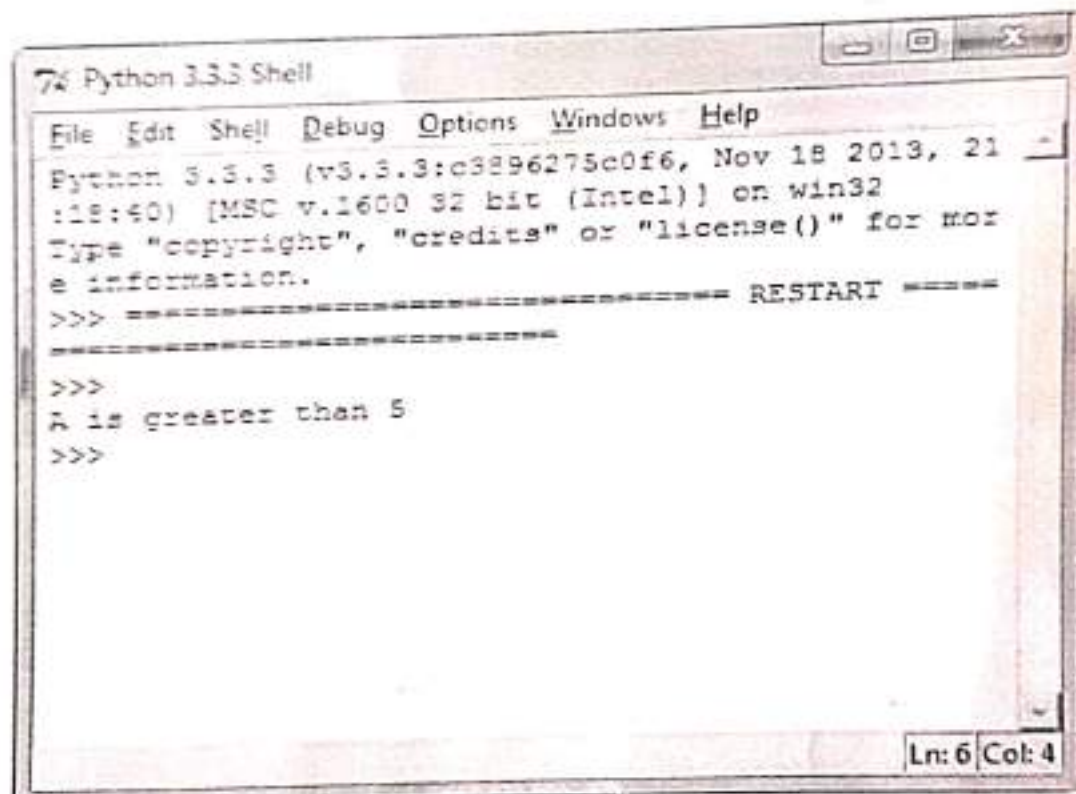

```
>>> # I can say anything here, even if Python doesn't like it.
... # because I'm protected by the awesome
... # octothorpe.
...
>>>

Functions.

The first step to code reuse is the function: a named piece of code, separate from all others. A function can take any number and type of input parameters and return any number and type of output results.

You can do two things with a function:

- Define it
- Call it

To define a Python function, you type `def`, the function name, parentheses enclosing any input parameters to the function, and then finally, a colon (`:`). Function names have the same rules as variable names (they must start with a letter or `_` and contain only letters, numbers, or `_`).

Let's take things one step at a time, and first define and call a function that has no parameters. Here's the simplest Python function:

>>> def do_nothing():
...     pass
```

Function Definition:

def make_a_sound():
    print('quack')
```

Function Calling:

>>> make_a_sound()
quack
```

Let's try a function that has no parameters but returns a value:

```
>>> def agree():
    return True
```

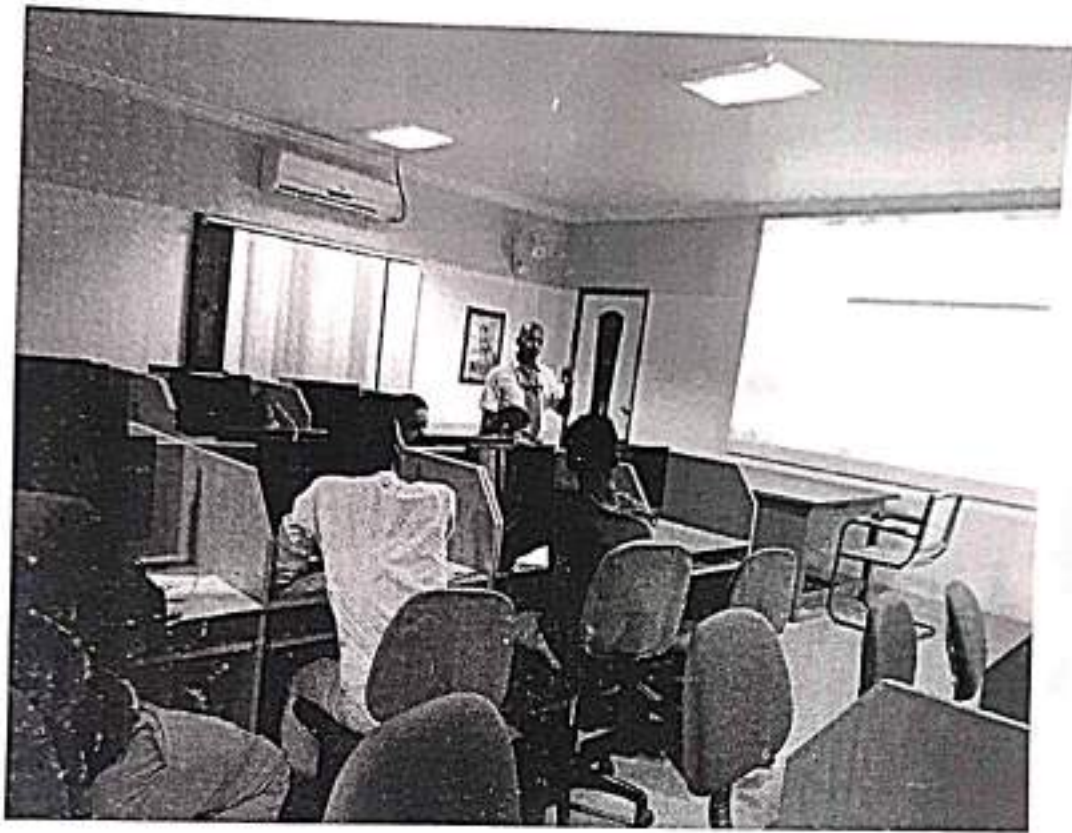

You can call this function and test its returned value by using `if`:

```
>>> if agree():
    print('Splendid!')
else:
    print('That was unexpected.')
```

Splendid!

INTRODUCTION:

World population day is an annual event, observed on 11th July every year, which seeks to raise awareness of global population issues. The event was established by the governing council of the United Nation Development Program in 1989. It was inspired by the public on July 11, 1987. The approximate date on which the world's population day aims to increase people's awareness on various population issues such as the importance of family planning, gender equality, poverty, and maternal health and woman rights. The day was suggested by Dr KC Zachariah in which population reaches five billion when he worked as demographer at world's bank. There is a general awareness in the global population that only at the increment of whole billions of people, the world population increases annually by 100 million approximately in every 4 months.

ACTIVITIES:

- ✓ Identify the factors that lead to an increase in population growth,
- ✓ Research two countries with regard to their population trends
- ✓ Create a chart for comparison between the two countries
- ✓ It is not minor health issues but also the root cause leading to poverty, gender inequality, violence, illiteracy and requiring joint efforts from the whole community to address.

LEARNING:

World population day is the celebration of awareness, one which tries to get people to know and learn about population issues. Issues include rights, rights to health, the baby's health, gender equality, child marriage, use of contraceptive, sex education, knowledge about sexually transmitted disease etc...

CONCLUSION:

The primary aim is to take initiative in increasing awareness about reproductive health problem among the people. This is due to the fact that a large number of pregnant women succumb to poor reproductive health. Research shows that 800 women die every day due to the process of birthing a baby. Therefore, the primary aim and importance of this day is to get more and more people to know how to boost their reproductive health, pay attention on the importance of family planning.

Making Waves

National Conference on Making Waves

Theme & Rationale:

Making Waves. If society is an ocean, social workers are the waves that incite change. We stir the waters, question what's normal, and encourage change in communities and the nation at large. Each change effort originates from a simple idea; just a ripple in a large body of water. But social workers foster these ideas through grass-roots efforts, community organizing, and social justice campaigns until change sweeps through society like a tsunami. We are not advocates of change simply for the sake of change. Our efforts are supported by evidence-based practice and a unifying Code of Ethics. Whether we work in micro, mezzo or macro settings, we are at the forefront of change, making waves in our profession. At the conference, we hope to generate ripples of ideas, learn from one another about the ever-changing tides of society, and celebrate the waves that social workers make every day.

SL No	Title of the presentations	Resource person
1	Reflective practise in social work	Rev. Fr Robert Ramesh Babu P
2	Care and protection of children : A right based approach	Asst Prof. A Selvanathan

Reflective practise is a vital component of social work profession. It's a process of reviewing and re-experiencing the past experience in order to evaluate, analyse, describe and gain more understanding on it. The practise is the heartbeat of the profession as it helps to retain the past learning's and experience and also apply it to situation whenever needed. The resource-person made an attempted to re-introduce the concept to the social work trainees who already practising it but was not aware of it. Such practise leads to correct decision making and help repetition of same mistakes. Children are the most vulnerable groups among all the vulnerable categories. It is because of the fact that they are fragile, and are susceptible to abuse and neglect. Their maturing state of development often demands special status of protection. Social work interventions among children need a lot of knowledge on knowledge as well as experience. The resource person made an attempt to provide knowledge based on the legislations of the government.

Parallel sessions of paper presentation

The parallel sessions started at 3.00 pm where the social work trainees were divided into three groups and were placed in three venues. The three groups were allotted with one social work trainer who became the chairperson of the presentations. The sub-conscious mind defines all reactions and automatic actions. We become aware of what we think about them, eg-our ability to drive a car, once we get skilled we stop thinking which way to ride, which pedal to use, yet aware of what was done once we think about it.

Unconscious mind

Defines all past events and memories, inaccessible to us no matter how hard we try to remember to bring it up.
